

NEW JERSEY TODAY IS THE CENTER OF INTEREST IN U. S.

Nation Watching With Keen
Eyes Result of Political Battle

13 HOURS OF VOTING

Three-Way Contest On For Nomination for United States Senator

New Jersey today becomes the centre of political interest for the entire nation as its voters go to the polls to decide in party primaries their preferences as nominees for various offices, chief of which is U. S. Senator.

There will be thirteen hours of polling. The polls opened at 8 A. M., daylight time, or 7 o'clock, standard time, and will remain open until 9, daylight time, or 8 standard time, this evening.

Universal interest in the three-way battle for the Republican nomination for Senator has crowded out of the minds of many persons the fact that other important nominations are to be made today. There are, for instance, a Republican and a Democratic nominee for Congress to be chosen in each of the State's twelve Congressional districts, while both parties are nominating candidates for State Senator in seven counties—Burlington, Cape May, Hunterdon, Middlesex, Passaic and Sussex—and candidates for the entire House of Assembly.

It is, however, the Republican Senatorial fight which has focused the political eyes of the nation on the State. While there are four candidates in the ring, only three of them are serious contenders. The fourth, John A. Kelly, a "wringing wet," will not figure heavily in the voting.

The three who have stirred the State from end to end as it has not recently been stirred, are Dwight W. Morrow, Ambassador to Mexico and a member of the American delegation to the recent naval arms conference in Europe; former Senator Joseph S. Frelinghuysen and Congressman Franklin W. Fort.

Mr. Frelinghuysen, who lost the Senatorial nomination in a five-handed battle in 1928, switched his stand in this campaign from dry to wet. He was the first candidate to announce himself, and some influential local leaders pledged themselves to him at once.

Then Mr. Morrow was induced to enter the race with the support of most of the powerful Republican leaders, and in his first speech of the campaign he declared himself in favor of repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment and return of liquor control to the States.

This wet stand brought Mr. Fort into the field as a dry, and so the three have campaigned for several weeks and so they go to the polls.

RE-ALLOTS MONEY FOR TOWNSHIP ROAD WORK

Highway Department Announces Additional Total for Counties This Years

1594 MILES IN BUCKS

HARRISBURG, June 17. — Certification of $61 township reward road improvement projects and payment of the State's share of the cost were made by the Pennsylvania Department of Highways from January 1 to June 10, 1930, James Lyall Stuart, Secretary of Highways today announced. The payments total $1,552,057.25.

With several thousands of agreements for township projects on file and hundreds of such projects under construction throughout the year, payments during the remainder of the present year are expected to be unusually heavy, Stuart said. The last General Assembly appropriated $6,000,000 for State Reward work and so prompt were the townships in filing agreements that many exceeded their allocations and permitted the agreements to stand, pending appropriation of more funds.

The payments made during 1930 represent improvements costing several times the actual reward total. Return of the State's share enables the township treasurer to pay off obligations and start new work, Stuart pointed out. Many townships have several agreements in force at once, starting a new project as soon as another is completed. This enables some townships to use the State money as a revolving fund.

Appropriations for the 1927-29 biennium were $3,000,000, just half of the current appropriation. This was promptly taken by the townships, but cancellation of agreements and slight differences in costs resulted in accumulation of $125,000 for reappropriation of townships that had taken up their original allocations. This makes available, as of June 1, 1930, amounts varying from $139 to more than $4000 per county but amounting to only a few dollars per township. Following are the allocations by counties:

PRESIDENT IS EXPECTED TO SIGN TARIFF BILL SHORTLY AFTER NOON TO DAY; LEADERS OF BOTH HOUSES IN ATTENDANCE--TO USE TWO PENS FOR JOB

Republican Conferees of House and Senate to See the Chief Attach His Signature to the Document — Expect Bill to Become Effective at Midnight if Signed at Noon

WASHINGTON, June 17.—Still the familiar centre of bitter political strife, the tariff bill today reached the last step of its transaction into law.

It remained only for President Hoover to affix his signature before the much-disputed measure could take its place upon the statute books of the Nation.

The Chief Executive was expected to sign the bulky document shortly after noon with newsreel cameras clicking and Congressional leaders looking on.

The Republican conferees of the House and Senate were invited to be present. Mr. Hoover planned to use two pens and then present them to Senator Smoot, of Utah, and Representative Hawley, of Oregon.

The measure bears their names by virtue of their leadership in its formulation as chairmen of the Senate Finance and House Ways and Means Committees.

The bill, if signed today, becomes effective tonight at midnight. Customs officials were ready to put it into operation. Copies had been despatched by mail and the more important regulations sent to port officers by telegraph.

Meanwhile, the Democrats and western Republican Independents, the latter disappointed that the export duty plan was stricken from the measure, were preparing to wage an intensive campaign in the coming Congressional elections, with the tariff as their issue.

Their challenge was accepted by the Republican regulars, who expressed confidence they would be victorious. Senator Watson, of Indiana, the majority leader, said his party had always won upon this issue and saw no reason to doubt the outcome.

Democratic spokesmen assailed the week-end statement in which President Hoover announced his intention of approving the bill and set forth the reasons which led him to this decision. Senator Robinson, of Arkansas, the Democratic leader, issued a statement describing the President's announcement as "an approval of the tariff bill with emphatic and important reservations."

Jouett Shouse, chairman of the National Executive Committee of the party, saw a similarity between the present situation and that of President

BABY'S LIFE IS SAVED BY TWO CROYDONITES

Frank Crossley Jumps Into
Schuylkill After Coach
Plunges Into Water

MOTHER WAS FRANTIC

Two Croydon men, Frank Crossley, 21, and Albert Check, 20, of Croydon, were instrumental in saving the life of a two-year-old baby Saturday afternoon, when the coach the infant was in plunged into the Schuylkill river.

The baby, Josephine Nattel, of 3018 N. Bonaill street, was taken to the Memorial Hospital and treated for exposure, after Crossley had made a dive into the water and come to the surface with the child.

The baby was handed to Lou Kauffman, a park guard, who rushed it to the hospital.

Mrs. Nattel stated to the police that she had put the brake upon the coach and was looking in another direction when the coach started down a flight of steps and plunged into the river.

It was upon hearing the screams of the mother that the Croydon men rushed to the spot. When the carriage dropped into the water Paul Lefler, a Philadelphia, who was seated on a cornerstone, grabbed the woman, to prevent her from jumping into the water.

Crossley and Check were en route to the annual East Falls Regatta.

Twilight Ball

FINAL SCORE IS 12 TO 9

Last Night's Result

(By T. M. Juno)

The Hibernians still cast a winning spell over the Emilie ball team. Last night for the sixth time in two seasons of Bristol Twilight League baseball the Emilie nine bowed to the A. O. H. team. Final score was 12-9 and the game was played on St. Ann's field.

The Farmers had the best chance in the world to beat the "Hibs" last night. They tallied eight runs in the first inning and going into the fifth the score was 9-3 and no one was dreaming what the future had in store. But suddenly with two out, hits began to pop out from the "Hibbies" bats and before the third man was retired six runs were put across the platter and the score deadlocked at 9-9.

In the next inning the Hibernians counted three more times and this was enough to do their favorite stunt, to come from behind and snatch a ball game.

Twenty-five safe blows rang from the bats of both teams, setting a league record for a six-inning fray. Eight of these hits were for extra bases.

The batting and fielding of Johnny Leyden was the feature of the game. This player had two doubles and a single credited to him and drove in five runs besides scoring three times himself. He played errorless ball and came up with several nice stops in the midst of Emilie rallies.

Ted Praul was the star for the losers, connecting for three out of three, on a long triple. Last night's hitting brings Praul's average to an even 500 percentage.

Jimmy Mangan after a bad start pitched good ball and added to his triumph with two hits. Watson, who relieved Carp in the fifth was charged with the defeat.

The defeat of the Farmers gives the Federals undisputed possession of first place for the time being.

EUROPE'S PROBLEM

The United States of America is a continent-wide economic unit and a federated nation which leaves a large share of government to the individual states. It is a pattern of union which has withstood all shocks and produced prosperity, power and contentment in a high degree.

Out there beyond the Atlantic lies Europe hampered by excessive territorial divisions differences of language and traditions, ancient, local and national antagonisms—multiplied obstacles to political and economic cooperation. In their complete political and economic independence the European countries have found strife, tests of power, insecurity and a constant economic struggle. So the dream of Europe is of a United States of Europe made plausible by the amazing success of American experiment.

Constantly annoyed and handicapped by her over-abundant boundary lines and internal divisions, Europe's natural reaction is to wipe out these boundary lines, or at least to reduce them to the harmlessness of the boundary lines between our states.

Some sort of a federation of European states seems to be the logical move, but while a simple matter theoretically it is almost an impossibility. The 13 original states in America found confederation no easy task, and they had behind them no centuries of wars, hatreds, fears, suspicions, envy, prejudices and over-emphasized nationalism.

The United States of Europe may some day be a reality, but it will not be built in a day or by the scratch of diplomatic pens.

THE NEW JUSTICE

Confirmation by the senate of President Hoover's appointment of Owen J. Roberts for the supreme court goes far to meet the widespread demand for a juster balance in the personnel than the existing six-to-three preponderance of "conservative" members.

Justice Roberts is not a crusading progressive on social and economic questions, and as a conspicuously successful lawyer his abilities have largely been at the service of property interests. Yet only four years ago he was the first choice for attorney general of Pennsylvania of so ardent and exacting a progressive as Gifford Pinchot.

His career indicates that on fundamental issues involving public rights and human welfare, he will far more often be found in agreement with the liberal-minded Justices Holmes, Brandeis and Stone, than with the conservative majority with the mantle of leadership of which has descended from the late Chief Justice Taft to Chief Justice Hughes.

This appointment is the reward and recognition of merit and ability, not an act of partisan expediency. It was quite legitimate of the president to seek a Southern jurist to fill the seat that had been occupied by Justice Sanford, of Tennessee, but it was logical to elevate to the highest tribunal of the land such a man as Owen Roberts. As a learned, high-minded and constructive lawyer of liberal convictions, he commands public respect and will do much to strengthen confidence in the supreme court.

SYNOPSIS

Tom Allen, young plantation owner, is on his way, unescorted to a prison camp where he is to be detained, the Germans having seized the territory of the British East African Protectorate. Nearly a strange rite is being enacted. Dawn, a girl, is being dedicated as a mystic bride of a pagan god, amid a weird pattern of dances by attendant girls. Tom has learned that she is as white as himself. Both are infatuated with one another. She, sister hating whipman, before whom the natives stand in abject fear, expects to put into execution, this night, his sinister designs on Dawn, who will be chained till morning.

INSTALLMENT ELEVEN

The thought invoked a strangled sob from her, a sob that Moods was quick to mark angrily. Her scowl throttled further involuntary protest in Dawn. The girls, without a backward glance at the chafed goddess, vanished silently into the jungle blackness. The piper, still blindfolded, clangorously marked time with the cymbals. Moods began to chant again, the ominous "To Save a Thousand Souls."

Dawn, her arms drawn down about her by the chains, stood gazing into the sky, unwilling to turn her eyes to the sights about her. Moods spoke no farewell, but took the piper by the hand and together they followed the bridesmaids.

Moods led Dawn to the weird ceremony.

down the darkened trail Dawn fetched a long sigh, a sigh half despair, half relief.

After leaving Pigeon unconscious in the jungle, Shep Keyes beat the brush in fury in his vengeful quest for Tom. Unable to draw from Pigeon Tom's precise whereabouts, Shep was at a decided disadvantage in the jungle blackness. He cursed with fluent viciousness as he stumbled over tree stumps and creeping vines, often barking his shins and suffering painful scratches on his face and arms.

But his punishment only served to key his temper to the pitch he desired it to, a temper when he encountered the Englishman. He was determined, even though he never emerged alive from the jungle, to beat Tom Allen to death. Tom, he insisted, was his arch enemy, and enemies must die.

Out of the night there came to Shep the sound of the cymbals. He smiled as he listened, hugging his whip to his chest, he beat in gay anticipation of his triumph he snapped his whip occasionally, scaring small animals out of the undergrowth.

As Shep pressed on he became aware that the foliage was less dense. From that fact he deduced that he was near a trail and perhaps very near to Dawn. He pondered the advisability of proceeding to her forthwith, postponing the punishment of Tom until he had kidnapped her from her wooden bedroom.

Abruptly it came to him that the cymbals had been silent for several minutes. He had lost all trace of time, and could not therefore judge whether this silence signified the end of the ceremony. It might mean, Shep reflected, that the whites, possibly under the leadership of Tom, had invaded the clearing and captured Dawn.

He cursed the impulse that had detected him from his purpose and sent him into the forest. Had he been content merely to beat Pigeon senseless and continue to the ritual ground, he might have effected the capture of Dawn and, later, seize Tom, too. Enraged and disappointed he plunged on, fear of losing the girl speeding his pace. Unwarily Shep's feet carried him to the trail he had abandoned earlier. He paused to light a cigarette, but so great was his impatience that he flung it away, still lighted, and resumed his journey, almost on a run. Through the trees he could see a moonlighted space and there, he was certain, Dawn stood chained, helpless before him.

It was not necessary for him to consider a plan of action. That had been perfected months previous. Perhaps Hasmali, suspecting him of abducting the blacks' goddess, would attempt to make trouble, but Shep had no fear. He was confident that the natives, cowed by his whip, would forswear their god for him.

Alone, Dawn felt at peace, unharmed. She continued to stand and watch the moon, almost afraid to look about her for fear of finding herself still attended by Moods, the maids and piper. She resolutely put Tom out of her mind, assuring herself that thought of him would only add to the agonies of the long night.

But thoughts of other things were untenable. Always her mind returned to Tom. And her loneliness mounted. To relieve this loneliness, she began to sing. The songs she chose were those taught her by Sister Hadwig and Tom, and soon they brought back thoughts of her white friends. In desperation she turned to native songs, the songs of the bridal ceremony.

"Alone I stand
Beneath the still pale light,
I robe the mystic moonbeams,
My couch the velvet night."

With a start she realized the import of the words she had uttered. It was the formal invocation that she sang, the surrender to Malunglu! She gasped in dismay and instinctively looked around quickly to ascertain if she had been overheard. Her eyes roved to where Shep stood watching her, but he was concealed by the jungle foliage. Suddenly she was startled by a cry that came from far, far off.

Weighted down with the kits of both Pigeon and himself Tom stumbled through the unfamiliar jungle. His mind was alive with concern. Though chiefly anxious for the safety of Pigeon, he was mindful, too, of his promise to Eric and of Dawn's plight. As time passed, he reflected, the condition of all things affecting him grew steadily worse.

"Pigeon! Pigeon!" he called hopefully, several times, but he was answered only by the noises of the jungle.

As he strode onward he became aware, with a twinge of guilt, that his calls, though addressed to Pigeon, really were intended for the ear of Dawn. The earlier music of the piper was assurance that she was not far away. He told himself that if he happened across her he would in no manner be guilty of violating his word to Eric. The pledge was uttered in genuine faith, neither bargained on Tom's being lost. Tom found it very easy to justify a visit to Dawn.

Coming upon a trail Tom was startled to see a faint speck of fire on the ground before him, a thin ribbon of smoke floating upward from it. Upon inspection it proved to be a cigarette stub. First thought was that it had been dropped by Pigeon, who was therefore within easy distance. But the Cockney, second thought reminded him, had been without cigarettes. Then who? Certainly none of the native girls.

Shep! He was following Dawn! This realization inflamed Tom to fury. Even now, he knew, Shep would be at the clearing with Dawn chained and defenseless. Flinging both kits from him, he broke into a run—on the trail now and unhampered by stumps and underbrush. He was grateful to Shep for having carelessly flung away the cigarette. It was both a warning and a beacon.

Bursting into the clearing where Dawn stood chained in the darkness, Tom was inexpressibly relieved to discover that he had beaten Shep to her side. Too breathless to speak at once he merely gazed at Dawn. She returned his gaze, startled.

"Why—why are you here?" she stammered.
"Dawn! Dawn!" he panted.
"You're all right? Sure?"
"Yes, Tom. But why are you here?"

"Pigeon lost the trail. We were separated and I came on alone through the jungle. I heard the piper and knew you were here. I followed the trail. They have chained you here, haven't they?"

"You must go at once," she cried, alarmed for him. "Oh, don't let them find you here. You must—"

Incredulous, Tom broke in. "And leave you here alone? I wouldn't dream of it."

"Got! Got!" Dawn beseeched him.
"Not alone, never."
"I am now Thabu," Dawn explained, a warning in her words. "No one, not even you, may touch me."

"Dawn, come with me," Tom pleaded. "We're meant to be together. Look, I've found you in the deepest nook in the jungle, a place something guided me to even in the darkness. Can't you see? It's inescapable. It's a greater god that your wretched Malunglu that—"

THREE TENNIS MATCHES
PLAYED OVER WEEK-END

There were three matches played over the week-end in the Bristol Tennis Tournament.

In the first group of games Skonger of the Keystone, opposed Taffe, a Y. M. A. man. The former won, 6-3; 6-1.

The game was not fast, but very hard fought, both players being rather conservative with their drives. Skonger feeling out his opponent in the first set did not take all advantages offered by his less experienced opponent who had a hard time getting around the court. The second set was played off in fast time, and Skonger, much more confident than in the first set showed a very nice brand of tennis, reeling off game by game.

In the Thorn (Elks)-Allen (Keystone) match, the Elks' representative won by a score of 6-1; 6-1.

The score by no means shows the relative ability of the two players. Thorn won because of his experience and extremely brainy tennis. Allen's only fault was his lack of confidence in his own playing. Nevertheless he played a brand of tennis worthy of better results. Although the score seems rather one sided, the fact that during the whole match only two games ended without a deuce score, shows how close the match was fought. It was a very pretty exhibition of playing, both players driving from the baselines.

Thorn played faultless tennis, his placements being fast and accurate, not a flashing player but an extremely consistent one. His good generalship on the court should prove him a very dangerous opponent in the future rounds of the tournament.

Koneczny, a Keystone player, won over Fegley of the Y. M. A. Result was 6-4; 2-6; 6-1.

Not a very dangerous player, Fegley showed at times a very good form. His good judgment in forcing upon Koneczny a slow lobbing game was responsible for the second set, the latter not being able to use his drive with any accuracy. Both players were off form; Koneczny not being able to get his service working, and Fegley driving the ball into the net continuously. The third set saw Koneczny at his best, driving dead placements and scoring points at will. In the last three games Fegley was able to score only twice. The last game consisted of four aces.

KONJOLA SCORES

Believed Case Hopeless Before New Medicine Came To Rescue

MRS. GEORGE GREENWOOD

"Konjola has benefited me so much that I am glad to endorse it," said Mrs. George Greenwood, 7733 Hillcrest Avenue, Pittsburgh. "I was in a very nervous, rundown condition. I had a nervous breakdown and was depressed mentally. I tried in many ways to find something that would help me regain my health, but everything failed."

"I thought my case was hopeless but Konjola made a change in one week. I started sleeping soundly and feeling more refreshed each morning. My appetite increased and my nerves became quieted. I feel one hundred percent better now. I recommend Konjola to all my friends because I know what it will do."

It is the same story of success wherever Konjola is introduced and put to the test and Konjola welcomes any test, no matter how severe.

Konjola is sold in Bristol at Hoffman's Cut Rate Store, and by all the best druggists in all towns throughout this entire section.—(Adv.)
